The Reunion

The letter came, it seemed simple,
An invitation to a Reunion.
There were names from another time,
Memories and places long forgotten,
And queries about the missing.
It frightened and it saddened me.

For I am surely not who I was then,
Nor am I who I thought I would be now.
And if I am not, who will they then be?
Will we accept each other as we are,
With marks and scars of age and time,
Or will we try to be as we were then?

For, it was a time to be remembered,
Of friends, and loves, and glories.
Of victor's wine, and defeat's sting,
Of causes well and cleanly fought,
With that certain sureness of youth,
And the wonder of being and doing.

But, truly, it will not be then,
The walks will be paced, and slower,
The hairs will be grayed, and fewer,
There will be gaps in the ranks,
And the memories, like our eyes,
No longer as sharp and true.

But if we should we listen closely--,
We may hear a voice thought long lost,
Or glimpse a nearly forgotten smile,
And know, once again, the camaraderie,
The laughter, tears, and the loving,
That made it a special time of years.

It's true, this is now, that was then,
But, I am here, and I shall be there.
For reunions, too, happen only once,
Then they, just as our long lost youth,
Become but a small bittersweet panel,
On the fading tapestry of our minds.
